UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE
FOR THE YEAR 1904

THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE

Under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office

WASHINGTON, D. C., 1905

The General Land Office is a bureau of the Department of the Interior, and is charged with the management of the public lands of the United States. It is the largest land-owning agency in the Government, and its lands are found in every State and Territory.

The General Land Office is organized into three divisions: the Surveying Division, the Land Division, and the Mineral Division. Each division is headed by a Chief of Division, and each division is further subdivided into sections.

The Surveying Division is charged with the surveying of the public lands, and with the preparation of maps and plats.

The Land Division is charged with the management of the public lands, and with the preparation of reports and documents.

The Mineral Division is charged with the management of the mineral lands, and with the preparation of reports and documents.

The General Land Office is also charged with the management of the public lands in the District of Columbia, and with the preparation of reports and documents.

The General Land Office is also charged with the management of the public lands in the Territories, and with the preparation of reports and documents.

The General Land Office is also charged with the management of the public lands in the Insular Possessions, and with the preparation of reports and documents.

The General Land Office is also charged with the management of the public lands in the Alaska Territory, and with the preparation of reports and documents.

The General Land Office is also charged with the management of the public lands in the Hawaiian Islands, and with the preparation of reports and documents.
